50 States Showdown Review Game

by Laura Candler

50 States Showdown is an active engagement game for reviewing state names, locations, capitals, and/or abbreviations. The activity is based on Showdown, a popular and effective cooperative learning strategy. In each round of the game, the Leader turns over the top card in a stack of task cards, and all players respond to the question or prompt by writing the answer on a dry erase board or tablet. When the Leader says, “Showdown,” everyone shows and compares their responses. 50 States Showdown can be played as a whole class, in centers, with partners, or within cooperative learning teams. Directions for three variations of the game are included, along with numbered U.S. maps, task cards, and answer keys. Some of the game materials have both color and black & white options, so be sure to print only the pages you plan to use.

Options for Recording Responses

All participants will need a method of recording their answers and showing them to the other players. The directions call for dry erase boards, but if you don't have enough for every student, you can substitute laminated sheets of card stock. If you have enough digital tablets, another option is to ask your students to open an interactive whiteboard app like ShowMe and to write their answers directly on their tablets.

Advanced Preparation Tips

50 States Showdown includes three variations of the same basic game; complete directions for each game can be found on pages 8 through 13. The maps and directions come in both color and black & white. Before you print any materials, read the directions for all three games and print only the pages you need.

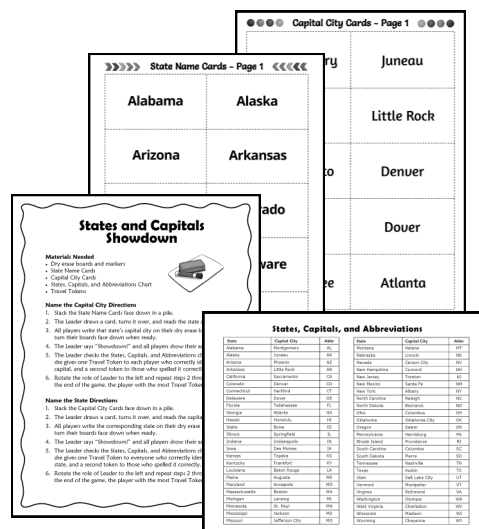

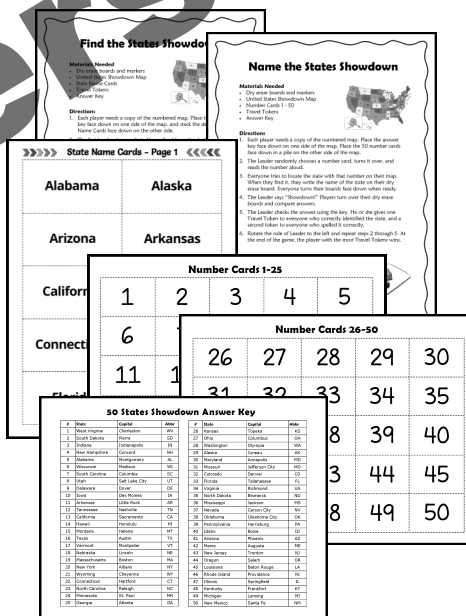

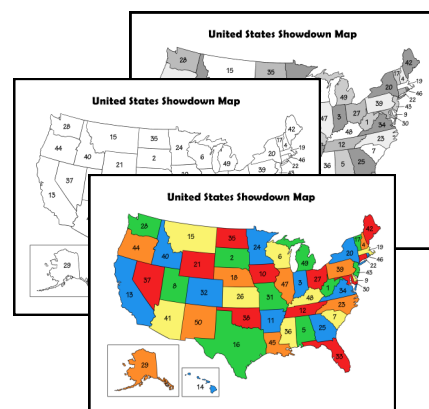

In all three games, “Travel Tokens” are awarded for correct answers and provide an easy way to keep track of points. The number of tokens needed will vary depending on the amount of time your students play and how quickly they respond to each task card, but it’s best to start with 20 or 30 tokens per player and adjust as needed. You can create Travel Tokens by printing and cutting apart the tokens on page 26, or you can substitute small objects like dried beans, plastic game counters, or paper clips. If you prefer not to use Travel Tokens, players can record tally marks to keep track of the points they earn.

Find the States Showdown and Name the States Showdown require players to find a given state on a numbered United States map and identify it by name or by number. There are three variations of the map which only differ by color, so print the one you prefer. Print a copy of the 50 States Showdown Answer Key for each set of game materials, too. Finally, you’ll need to print a set of 50 State Name Cards and 50 Number Cards for each game. Cut the cards apart and paper clip them together or store them in snack sized bags.

The number cards are difficult to handle and stack due to their small size, so you may want to replace them with numbered craft sticks. Write a number on one end of each craft stick, and place all 50 sticks, number-side down, in a sturdy cup or can. When it’s time for the Leader to choose a number, he or she will choose a craft stick instead of a number card.

States and Capitals Showdown is played without a map. The only materials needed for the game are the State Name Cards, the Capital City Cards, the student directions, and the States, Capitals, and Abbreviations chart which serves as the answer key. The State Name Cards and Capital City Cards look similar after they’re printed and cut apart, so you may want to print them in different colors to keep them from getting mixed up.

All three games require some initial preparation, so if you’re short on time, ask students or parent volunteers to help you cut apart the cards and Travel Tokens. Laminate the materials for each game, store them in a safe place, and you’ll be able to use them year after year!

Teaching Tips and Modifications

You can play all three versions of 50 States Showdown as a whole class, or students can play with partners, in centers or in cooperative learning teams. No matter which option you choose, it's best to introduce each game to your whole class before allowing your students to play on their own. Display a copy of the United States Showdown Map and read the directions aloud as you demonstrate how to play the game. After your students understand the rules, seat them in pairs or teams and distribute the materials.

Setting Time Limits

The game directions don't include time limits for recording answers, but you may need to add time limits to keep the game moving. Most students need less than a minute to record their answers, and it can be frustrating for them to wait four or five minutes for other players to respond. Setting an appropriate time limit for responding will keep players focused on the game and will result in a more productive review session. To determine the correct amount of time for each round, observe several teams while they play and notice how much time it takes for MOST students to finish. One-minute sand timers may provide the right amount of time, but if they don't, you may need to provide an alternate timing device.

Non-competitive Showdown

Showdown can be played competitively as the game directions are written, but it can also be played non-competitively as a fun practice activity that doesn't result in winners and losers. To downplay the competitive elements of the game, eliminate the Travel Tokens and point system. The rest of the game directions are the same. After each round of play, the Leader checks the answers and makes sure everyone knows the correct response. Then all players erase their dry erase boards, the role of Leader rotates to the left, and the next Leader draws a card from the deck. The steps are repeated and the activity continues until you end the game.

Options for Spelling Modifications

Students aren't directly penalized for misspelling state and capital city names; however, players who spell those names correctly are rewarded with a bonus token. If you're concerned that rewarding correct spelling will give some students an unfair advantage, you can eliminate the use of bonus tokens. Another option is to provide each team with a copy of the Alphabetical List of State Names and the Alphabetical List of Capital Cities, and allow players to refer to these lists as needed.

States and Capitals Matching Game

For additional practice, you can use the State Name Cards and the Capital City Cards to create five matching games having 20 cards each. This is easy to do because the states and capitals match on the corresponding numbered pages of cards. To create Set 1 of the States and Capitals Matching Game, print the first page of the state names and the first page of capital city cards, cut the cards apart, and store all 20 cards in a snack-sized bag. Create the other four sets using the remaining pages of State Name and Capital City Cards.

Materials Needed

- Dry erase boards and markers
- United States Showdown Map
- State Name Cards
- Travel Tokens
- Answer Key

Directions

1. Each player needs a copy of the numbered map. Place the answer key face down on one side of the map, and stack the deck of State Name Cards face down on the other side.
2. The first Leader draws a State Name Card from the deck, turns it over, and reads the state aloud.
3. Everyone looks for that state on their own map. After they locate it, they write the corresponding number on their dry erase boards. Everyone turns their boards face down when ready.
4. The Leader says "Showdown!" All players flip their dry erase boards face up and compare answers.
5. The Leader checks the answer using the key and gives one Travel Token to each player who correctly wrote the number of the state.
6. Rotate the role of Leader to the left and repeat steps 2 through 5. When the game ends, the player with the most Travel Tokens wins.

Challenge Variation

For a more challenging game, require players to write the state number, its capital city, and its abbreviation in step 3. Award a Travel Token for each correct answer.
